I would like to express my strong objection to the proposed depot plans in Dublin 8. As a home owner in the area it is patently clear that the area lacks green space. Having lived in east London through a similar regeneration it was fantastic to see how the regeneration brought prosperity, diversity and improved safety to the area - now one of the Jewels of London with Shoreditch, Hackney and Dalston - once no go areas, now thriving. A large part of the successful regeneration of these areas was the improvement of existing public spaces and addition of new ones. Dublin 8 has few, if any discernable public spaces, to falter now jeopardises the development of an area in the heart of the city, much visited and in need of green space.
